

Back matter for PAJLS 19:

*Proceedings of the Association for Japanese
Literary Studies* 19 (2018): 281–285.

PAJLS 19:

Violence, Justice, and Honor in Japan's Literary Cultures.

Editor: Ann Sherif

Managing Editor: Matthew Fraleigh

ABOUT THE CONTRIBUTORS

Quillon Arkenstone received his Ph.D. in East Asian Languages and Literatures from the University of Hawaii at Manoa, where his dissertation focused on early proletarian literature. His research is in modern Japanese literature, and includes Japanese and Korean literature of the empire, colonial and metropolitan mystery fiction, and travel literature.

Heather Bowen-Struyk teaches Japanese literature, culture, and film at DePaul University. She has taught at Notre Dame, University of Chicago, University of Michigan, and Loyola University Chicago. She is guest editor of the Fall 2006 positions special issue, "Proletarian Arts in East Asia." She co-edited Red Love Across the Pacific with Ruth Barraclough and Paula Rabinowitz (2015) and For Dignity, Justice, and Revolution: An Anthology of Japanese Proletarian Literature (2016) with Norma Field.

Monika Dix is Professor of Japanese Language, Literature & Culture at Saginaw Valley State University. She received her Ph.D. in Japanese Literature from the University of British Columbia. Her research focuses on representations of women in medieval Buddhist narratives, and her publications include "Heike Nōkyō as Repertoire: Kiyomori's Devotional Practice of Copying Sutras and the Production of Buddhist Tales," in Mikael Adolphson & Anne Commons, eds., Loveable Losers: The Taira in Action and Memory (University of Hawai'i Press, 2015).

Hiroimi Tsuchiya Dollase is Associate Professor of Japanese at Vassar College. Her research interests include Japanese women's literature, girls' magazine culture, and shōjo manga. She is the author of Age of Shōjo: The Emergence, Evolution, and Power of Japanese Girls' Magazine Fiction (SUNY Press, 2019). She also co-edited Shōjo Manga Wonderland with S. Kan and K. Takeuchi (Meiji Shoin, 2012) and Manga!: Visual Pop-Culture in ARTS Education with M. Toku (InSEA Publications, 2020).

Mika Endo received her Ph.D. at the University of Chicago in 2011 and taught Japanese literature and language at Bard College in upstate New York. Her research interests are in modern children's literature and arts education, with an emphasis on leftist political movements. She is currently an independent scholar based in Los Angeles.

Charlotte Eubanks is Associate Professor of Comparative Literature, Japanese, and Asian Studies at Penn State. They are author of The Art of Persistence: Akamatsu Toshiko and the Visual Cultures of Transwar Japan (University of Hawai‘i Press, 2020) and Miracles of Book and Body: Buddhist Textual Culture and Medieval Japan (University of California Press, 2011), and serve as Associate Editor for the journal Verge: Studies in Global Asias (University of Minnesota Press).

Norma Field is professor emerita, University of Chicago. Together with Heather Bowen-Struyk, she edited For Dignity, Justice, and Revolution: An Anthology of Japanese Proletarian Literature (Chicago). She is the author of Kobayashi Takiji: 21seiki ni dō yomu ka and Ima, heiwa o honki ni kataru ni wa (Iwanami). She works on the Fukushima nuclear disaster, on which her most recent piece is “This Will Still Be True Tomorrow: Fukushima Ain’t Got the Time for Olympic Games” (APJ: Japan Focus).

Naomi Fukumori is an Associate Professor in the Department of East Asian Languages and Literatures at The Ohio State University, where she teaches courses on premodern Japanese literature and culture (with emphasis on women’s writing of the Heian and Kamakura periods). She also serves as the director of The Ohio State University’s Institute for Japanese Studies (2021–2024).

Higuchi Yoshizumi 樋口良澄 earned his degree from Waseda University and is professor at Kanto Gakuin University. His research focuses on Japanese experimental theater and modern poetry. His publications include Mokpo Tsushin (with Yoshimasu Gozo, 2010), Kara Jūrō-ron: Gyakushū suru kotoba to nikutai (2012), Ayukawa Nobuo Kyōjō no Shigaku/Ayukawa Nobuo, poetics from the bridge (2016), winner of the Ono Tozaburo Prize.

Faye Yuan Kleeman 阮斐娜 received her Ph.D. in East Asian Languages and Cultures from the University of California, Berkeley. She taught at the City University of New York, University of California at Riverside, and the College of William and Mary before joining the University of Colorado in 1998. She is the author of Under an Imperial Sun (2003) and In Transit: The Formation of the Colonial East Asian Cultural Sphere (2014), both published by the University of Hawai‘i Press.

Kimberly Kono is Professor of Japanese in the Department of East Asian Languages and Cultures at Smith College. She is the author of Romance, Family and Nation in Japanese Colonial Literature (Palgrave, 2010). Her work has been included in Reading Colonial Japan: Text, Context and Critique (UC Press, 2012), U.S.-Japan Women's Journal, and Japanese Language and Literature. Her research currently focuses on the writing of Japanese women who traveled to colonial Manchuria.

Yuki Miyamoto earned a Ph. D. in ethics from the Divinity School, the University of Chicago. Miyamoto has been teaching primarily the nuclear discourse and environmental ethics at DePaul University. Her writings include Beyond the Mushroom Cloud: Religion, Commemoration, Religion, and Responsibility after Hiroshima (2011), Naze genbaku ga aku dewanai no ka (2020), and A World Otherwise: Environmental Praxis in Minamata (forthcoming in 2021), in addition to several articles in these topics.

Notohara Yumi 能登原由美 earned a PhD from Hiroshima University and teaches musicology at Osaka College of Music. She researches the reception of Western classic music in Japan. Her publications include music criticism and scholarly works such as “Musical Narrative in Representing Hiroshima: A Case Study of Erkki Aaltonen’s Second Symphony ‘Hiroshima’”(1949),” Sounds, Societies, Significations: Numanistic Approaches to Music (2017); “Hiroshima” ga narihibiku toki 『「ヒロシマ」が鳴り響くとき』(2015); 「音楽における原爆の表象—原爆詩の扱いとその変遷に着目して—」『原爆文学研究』(2017). Notohara chairs Hiroshima and Music ヒロシマと音楽 <http://hirongaku.com/>.

Okamura Yukinori 岡村幸宣 is Curator and Managing Director of the Maruki Gallery for the Hiroshima Panels in Saitama, Japan. He earned a degree at Tokyo Zokei University. His prize-winning publications include “The Hiroshima Panels Visualize Violence: Imagination over Life,” Journal for Peace and Nuclear Disarmament (2019). 東京造形大学 造形学部卒。原爆の図丸木美術館学芸員。丸木位里、丸木俊を中心に、社会と芸術との関わりについて研究、展覧会の企画などを行っている。著書に『非核芸術案内』（岩波書店、2013）、『《原爆の図》全国巡回』（新宿書房、2015）、『《原爆の図》のある美術館』（岩波書店、2017）、『未来へ 原爆の図丸木美術館学芸員作業日誌 2011-2016』（新宿書房、2020）。

Sharalyn Orbaugh is Professor and Head of Department in Asian Studies at the University of British Columbia. One of her research streams examines the nature of World War II propaganda through comparisons of images and tropes in popular culture media from Japan, the UK, France, Germany, and China. Recent publications in this area include: Propaganda Performed: Kamishibai in Japan's Fifteen Year War (2015); and “Play, Education, or Indoctrination? Kamishibai in 1930s Japan” (Mechademia II, 2018).

Paola Scrolavezza teaches Japanese Culture and Literature at Bologna University. Her research interests include women's literature as well as the intersections between cinema, literature and urban space. Recently, she has become interested in cultural processes, the circulation of fiction in the new media age and the construction of transnational imagery in the context of globalization. Author of several essays, she has translated into Italian the works of Yoshiya Nobuko, Enchi Fumiko, Ogawa Yoko and Hayashi Fumiko.

Nathan Shockey is Associate Professor of Japanese at Bard College in Annandale-on-Hudson, New York, where he teaches on Japanese literature, culture, and media studies and sits on the steering committee for the Center for Experimental Humanities. He is the author of The Typographic Imagination: Reading and Writing in Japan's Age of Modern Print Media (Columbia University Press, 2020).

Kendra Strand is an assistant professor of premodern Japanese literature and visual culture at the University of Iowa. Her research interests are in travel narratives, waka poetry, and manuscript culture. She is currently working on a monograph that examines how travel, landscape, and famous places are represented in fourteenth-century Japanese travel diaries, particularly among participants of the poetic milieu surrounding Nijō Yoshimoto (1320–1388) and the Ashikaga shogunate.

Shih-wei Sun is an assistant professor at Aoyama Gakuin University in Tokyo, Japan. He received his BA at National Taiwan University, MA at Columbia University, and PhD at University of California, Los Angeles. He is interested especially in Nara period Japanese texts, and wrote his MA thesis focusing on the Mythologies of Kojiki and Nihon shoki, and his dissertation on Nihon ryōiki.

Michiko Suzuki is Associate Professor of modern Japanese literature and comparative literature at the University of California, Davis. Her areas of specialization include women writers, gender, modernity, sexuality, sexology, and material culture. She is the author of Becoming Modern Women: Love and Female Identity in Prewar Japanese Literature and Culture (Stanford, 2010). Currently she is completing a book tentatively titled Reading Material: The Kimono in Twentieth-Century Japanese Literature and Film.

Robert Tierney is professor of modern Japanese literature in the EALC Department at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. His recent major publications include Monster of the Twentieth Century: Kōtoku Shūsui and Japan's First Anti-Imperialist Movement (University of California Press, 2015) and “Othello in Tokyo: Performing Race and Empire in Early Twentieth Century Japan,” Shakespeare Quarterly 62(4), December 2011. He is currently working on a study of death writings in modern Japan.

Pier Carlo Tommasi earned his Ph.D. in 2019 from Ca' Foscari University of Venice, where he is currently Research Fellow and Adjunct Professor of modern and classical Japanese language. His research unites two strands of analysis by bridging literature and history through the study of warrior culture and its local reconfigurations. Among his interests are the emergence of knowledge networks and the developments of literacy in peripheral contexts from the late-14th to early-17th centuries.

Richard Torrance is a professor of Japanese in the Department of East Asian Languages and Literatures at Ohio State University. His recent publications include “The Infrastructure of the Gods,” Japan Review, 29 (2016) and “Ōnamochi: The Great God who Created All Under Heaven,” Japanese Journal of Religious Studies, 46 (2019).